WOMAN'S FANCIES

GOLF IS THE SUMMER GAME

Links Outvie Tennis Field as the August Rendezvous.

MEN AND WOMEN WHO PLAY

The English Sport Has Taken Sudden Growth and Become Popular.

UDYARD KIP-ling is having golf links laid out on his estate near Brattleboro, Vt. Kipling is an English tourist, but everybody else who can borrow, or steal land enough to do the same thing, and so one is forced to a conclusion.

Golf has vitality. It was going to be a fad. It has become a game. It has shaken the popularity of tennis at nearly every summer resort in the East this season. Golf is contagious. One place catches it from another. Presently it will rage.

The country clubs are becoming nothing but golf clubs. The chief use of the bicycle is to take you to a place where you can spend the day golfing. The man in golfing tweeds and highland gaiters takes better with the summer girl than the white duck young man; that's a pointer.

The girls you pass on country roads are more to be discussing wrist movements, "holes," and "drives," that's another.

Golf sprouted in earnest at Newport last summer; this year it is in full blossom. The great canary-colored, country clubhouse out on the Ocean Drive, that is so nondescript in its architecture without, and so luxurious within, is furnished with an eye single to the comfort of golfers.

At Lenox, the links will be increased to eighteen holes in September, and play promises to be lively all winter. Every resort of any note among the White Mountains has its links, and the brides at Niagara Falls forget to laugh to the roar of the cataract in the joys of golfing.

The United States Golf Association now comprises ten affiliated clubs. Theodore A. Havemeyer is president, and among the most difficult and therefore most interesting links are those of the Philadelphia Country Club, the Meadow Hunt Club, at Hempstead, L. I.; the Morris County Golf Club, at Morristown, N. J.; the Chicago Golf Club and the St. Andrew's Club, of Yorkton, N. Y.

There is scheduled an international golf tournament to take place at Niagara September 1, and other tournaments will be held at Newport, Yorkton and Philadelphia from the 1st to the 19th of October.

But the best links in the country will not be on a club ground. Unless the golfing authorities are greatly mistaken, the course which Mr. Frederick W. Vanderbilt is to build on the grounds of his recently purchased Hudson mansion at Hyde Park-on-the-Hudson, will cost more and be finer than any now known.

Dr. W. Seward Webb has a good private links on his Sueton Falls farm, though it is only a nine-hole course.

And the men and women who play? Theodore A. Havemeyer was almost the first American to take up the game, and has pushed it to its present popularity in Newport. He talks golf, plays golf, and wears the smartest attainable golfing clothes.

Ex-Gov. Russell, of Massachusetts, is one of the most devoted golfers in the country, and is vice president of a golf club at Kendall Green.

Gen. Charles J. Palmer, who defended the American flag with the Fort, the Mayflower, and the Volunteer, has not given up yachting, but he has added golfing to his pleasures.

The amateur golf champion of America is Mr. L. B. Stoddard, who won the title on the links of the St. Andrew's Club, at Yorkton, last year. In the championship tournament to be held at Newport the first week in October, Mr. Stoddard will have for competitor Mr. George Hunter, of the Richmond County Country Club, of Ros-bank, Staten Island. Mr. Hunter holds the record over the links of his own club, and a pretty contest is expected.

There are not many women who really play well. Mrs. W. Seward Webb is one of the best in the country. Her record over the links at Lenox is seventy-eight strokes.

Mrs. Herman O'Brien is a good player, but most of the girls who wield the club do it as they do tennis, to show tawdry blouses and in general, smart clothes. In the ladies' tournament held by the Morris County Golf Club in July, Miss Louise V. Field was winner. But the golf is new here yet, and twelve months from now the girls if they do not all equal Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, will have better records to show. A six-hole course, three times round, is the favorite for women, and short-tweed skirts, bright blouses and high round shoes are the clothes. If golf did not take so much ground, its novelty, the delight of the "caddy" and its beautiful English flavor, would help it to beat tennis clean out of the field.

CAPTURING TIGERS ALIVE.

Experiences of an Agent in Search of Specimens.

The business of replenishing menageries with wild animals is interesting, especially when the circus agents go directly to the haunts of the beasts to capture them alive. J. B. Gaylord, foreign agent for the Ringling Bros' circus, has had some thrilling experiences in his work. Some time ago he wrote the Singapore Free Press about a hunt to capture tigers alive. Among other things he wrote:

"Although the island of Singapore is only fourteen miles in extent, there are no less than five hundred tigers that inhabit its woods, and people here do not venture alone beyond the city limits after nightfall. The first night of my arrival here, while our ship lay in the harbor, I could plainly hear the roaring of the bloodthirsty beasts as they prowled around the outskirts of the city in search of prey. Mr. de Silva, the native agent, having located several tiger trails, we started on foot with about fifty natives the next morning. The trip to the first tiger trail was only three or four miles, and we arrived at the point at about 6 o'clock.

"We next took three bamboo sticks about twelve feet in length and placed them in the form of a tripod, in such a position as to bring the point of the tripod directly above the center of the pit. From the top of the bamboo sticks one of the natives suspended a live goat by a cord barely strong enough to bear its weight, and sure to break if the tiger leaped upon the goat. Everything being in readiness for Mr. Tiger, as soon as he chose to go against our little game, he de Silva and myself, as well as the natives required to hunt about twenty yards distant and awaited developments. It had been dark about an hour, and I began to think we were going to be disappointed, when one of the natives rushed into the hut, crying, 'Lend a hand!'

"The furious cries of the tiger had startled him with a terrific roar it sprang upon the suspended goat, and, going down with its burden, sank into the merciless pit prepared for it. Igniting a number of torches to light the way and to forestall any attack that might possibly be made upon us from wild animals, we proceeded in a body to the pit. The tears of the tiger were awful, as he furiously tried to leap upward to gain his freedom. As I have already explained to you, the sides of the pit slanted inward toward the top, and at every effort the tiger could be heard striking his nose against the loose earth.

"This frantic behavior was kept up for about an hour, when, entirely exhausted, the fierce king of the jungle lay perfectly quiet at the bottom of the pit. Two of the natives now lowered a bamboo basket down into the pit, letting the open side fall directly over the supine form of the tiger. Immediately after this a number of natives jumped into the pit and began crowding the animal with their hands and feet, until he was completely enclosed in the bamboo basket.

"Returning to the hut, we awaited the dawn, and as soon as it appeared the natives went back to the pit and lifted the basket containing the tiger out of it. We detailed two of the coolies to take our captive to the city. Before they started I took a look at our prize through the rattan sides. He was a magnificent specimen, but the sorriest-looking tiger I ever saw. He was covered with blood from his frantic efforts to get out of the pit, and his skin was peeled from his nose and face, while the eyes were almost entirely closed by the swollen face."—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Detail of Today.

She glanced at him carelessly, but not unkindly. "You must stay in this evening, John. Your cousin class must be without you. I need your services while I fit my new walking costume."

"But—"

"The husband of the new woman faltered. '—did—didn't you have a dress form for such purposes?'

"Dress form?"

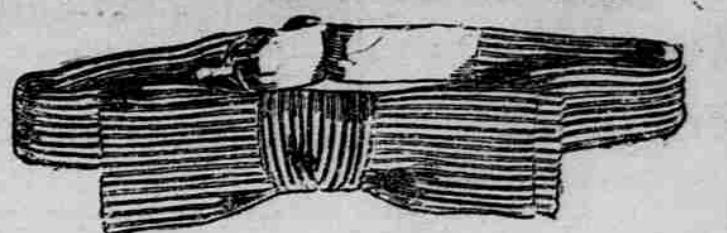

"She froze him with a glance. 'You forget yourself!'

But he remembered as he dozed them, unfinished as they were, and stood for half an hour while she debated with whether they were to be worn this fall baggy at the knees.—Fock.

OBJECTED TO THE CHANGE

Stormy Session of the Catholic Benevolent Society Thwarted.

Members Wish to Eliminate the Word "Irish" From the Title, But No Action Was Taken.

The Irish Catholic Benevolent Association resumed its sessions this morning at Carroll Hall. The delegates were late in getting together, as many of them availed themselves of the cool morning and drove about the city.

Some feeling was manifested by the prompt delegates over the tardiness of the others, and a motion was made to declare the offices of president and secretary vacant, but cooler counsel prevailed and the motion was voted down.
